Alex del Carmen received a Ph.D. in Criminology from the College of Criminology at Florida State University. He is considered an authority on the topic of race and crime with particular emphasis on racial profiling law enforcement. Dr. del Carmen has written numerous articles in internationally recognized journals and published several books. Among these is the nationally recognized book titled "Racial Profiling in America," which he published with Prentice Hall. Dr. del Carmen has presented his research findings throughout the world (Scotland, Belgium, Slovenia, Spain, United Arab Emirates, and Italy). He has trained thousands of police officers including all of the Texas Police Chiefs. In addition, he is responsible for creating the Texas racial profiling statistical template widely used by law enforcement agencies throughout the state. He is often a guest on CNN, Fox News Radio, Telemundo, Univision, and NBC, among other media outlets.

Dr. del Carmen is currently Associate Dean and Professor of the School of Criminology, Criminal Justice and Strategic Studies at Tarleton State University. In that role, he oversees the criminal justice program, graduate program in public administration, Corp of Cadets, and five academic institutes. He has also served as a Federal Monitor for the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana where he had direct oversight over the police academy, immigration issues and racial profiling. Recently, Dr. del Carmen was appointed by a federal judge to be part of the monitoring team in Puerto Rico where he currently oversees internal affairs, use of force, and biased based policing.

Dr. del Carmen lives in the Dallas-Fort Worth area. He is married and has two children.
